

Regular veterinarian controls confirm the excellent animal welfare in our European fur-farms

European fur-farming sector is one of the most regulated farming sectors in Europe, especially in terms of animal health and welfare. Many scientific and veterinarian reports have shown and confirmed that fur-farming uses responsible practices which are totally in line with the very strict national and European legislation. A recent report published by the Food Administration of Denmark, confirms this:

“Disease incidence and mortality of mink is at a low level that is significantly below that of other livestock in Denmark” (April 2010)

EFBA welcomes and supports the review of the European Action Plan on Animal Welfare 2006-2010 in order to introduce a new community Animal Welfare Law and its enforcement. Its enforcement at national level by the veterinarian authorities is crucial in order to guarantee strict compliance in all the member states.
